Dissertation

2020. “Small NGOs in global governance: Agenda setting in the governance of biodiversity and wildlife conservation”

Committee Wendy H. Wong (Chair), Steven F. Bernstein, Christopher Cochrane

Summary The number of NGOs participating in global governance has expanded in recent decades. To date, existing research on NGOs in global governance has overwhelmingly focused on a small number of well-established NGOs but overlooked what comprise the vast majority of civil society, small NGOs. Contrary to the common assumption that small NGOs are free-riders of the powerful, I argue that small NGOs substantially influence the variation of issue salience among the public due to the interdependence of demand and supply in the advocacy market. I evaluate my theory in the issue area of biodiversity and wildlife conservation. My empirical research examines the relationship between NGOs and 1) the public salience of conservation issues, 2) individual attitudes towards conservation, and 3) global conservation regulations. I adopt mixed-methods, including computational text analysis, survey experiment, and in-depth interviews. Overall, my dissertation establishes that small NGOs target a small segment of the public that is interested in conservation, rather than the mass public, to affect global governance agendas and outcomes.
